THE PAPER THAT EVERYBODY READS TWO CENTS

Narrowly Escapes Choking to Death

Edward Ostler of Roscoe has Morsel of Meat Lodged in Throat—Services of Physician Required to Give Relief

Edward Ostler of Roscoe, janitor of the Roscoe school building, which was destroyed by a firebug's torch, one year ago tonight, came near choking to death when a piece of beef became lodged in his throat, while he was eating his dinner Sunday. The beef was lodged so firmly in the throat that Dr. Middleton, who was hastily summoned, was compelled to use forceps to remove the obstruction before Ostler was given relief.

Ostler, with members of his family and some company, was enjoying a big Sunday dinner. He had remarked that the meat was somewhat tough, which started a discussion of the high cost of living and some laughter. At this moment, Ostler attempted to swallow a chunk of the meat, which he had been chewing industriously but the morsel lodged in his throat, partially closing his windpipe.

Only Sore Throat

While Ostler struggled for breath, his wife went to his rescue and being unable to dislodge the meat, the physician was summoned. Other than a very sore throat the victim suffered no ill effects from his thrilling experience, Monday.

An Ex-Butcher

Since the burning of the school building, Ostler had conducted a meat market in Roscoe until two weeks ago, when he sold out. As a result, he has been the subject of more or less jollying by his friends because of his inability to pick tender steak.

Everybody Boosts Own University

At this time of year those who contemplate entering college in the near future are beset on every side by students from different schools who are home on vacations. Each student is thoroughly taken with the school he or she attends and all are extremely anxious to have some other person from the locality a member of the school.

Any person who tries to get pointers on the different schools becomes thoroughly impressed with the high class of colleges and universities afforded by this country and one becomes convinced that each school is extremely democratic, excels in athletics and studies and in fact that it has every merit which goes to make the best school in the world.

Large crowds attended the show last evening and this afternoon judges will start to award the prizes. The show will continue until Friday night at 9:30 o'clock.

Mandamus Suit to Open Up Highway

A mandamus suit to compel the opening of a public road, which it is alleged has been obstructed with a fence for the past five months, was filed in common pleas court Monday.

Rine and is known as Scott's lane. The petitioners allege that the highway has been closed with a fence to the inconvenience. Attorney C. G. Williams represents the petitioners.

Every advertiser in the country, big or little, if he knows the game and keeps tab on his advertising expenditures, prefers to place his money with the paper which has the biggest classified page.

He knows that the classified pages of newspapers are the truest index to circulation. He knows that the people who read newspapers are patrons of the classified pages. He knows that nine readers out of ten put their "Want" or "For Sale" ads in the paper they pay for and read.

This is true in Coshocton and it's true in every city in the country. The paper with the largest classified page has the largest circulation. On this basis The Morning Tribune has as large, or larger, circulation than both its competitors combined.

And if any advertiser, local or foreign, doesn't believe that The Tribune's circulation is larger than that of both other local papers combined The Tribune is perfectly willing to submit to any further examination he may see fit to make.

There is no record or data in the possession of this paper bearing on circulation that will not at any time be put at the disposal of any advertiser. Card indexes, mailer, news postage bills, white paper bills, press run and any other methods which the advertiser cares to follow to ascertain the exact circulation of The Tribune will be placed at his disposal.

Will the other local papers submit to the same test?

Grange Will Discuss "Poor Cooks vs. Tobacco"

The men and women of the Plainfield grange are going to clash at next Saturday's meet on the question of whether poor cooks or tobacco is the harder upon man's constitution.

The subject for debate is "Resolved—that poor cooking causes more injury to mankind than tobacco." John Sweitzer and Henry Frank will uphold the affirmative and Mrs. Frank Harmon and Mrs. John Forney, the negative. The rest of the program, as announced by Secretary G. T. Vencil, is as follows:

Topic—"Is there adequate provision made for farm children's play?" Mrs. Benjamin Wiggins.
"New methods I shall try next year." John Miskimin, C. E. Aronholt and Frank Harmon.
Reading—Mrs. Cecil Magers.
Solo—Mrs. John Forney.
Recitations—Misses Mildred Miskimin, Corinne Vencil and Annis Robinson.
Song by Misses Carma and Kathleen Vencil.

M'Donald Offered Superintendency of New Castle Schools

It is learned that Sheriff A. C. McDonald has been offered the superintendency of the New Castle schools, to start after the holidays and after the expiration of his present term in the sheriff's office, January 6.

In Failing Health Prof. Christy of Ravenna, O., who had charge of the schools until about two weeks ago was forced to resign because of continued failing health. Since that time the school has been without an instructor and it is learned little effort has been made since to secure another instructor in the hopes that Sheriff McDonald would accept.

A Competent Instructor Sheriff McDonald has been an instructor in Coshocton county schools for many years and is reputed one of the county's most competent educators. It was largely due to his popularity acquired as a teacher that he was elected sheriff twice with overwhelming majorities.

The superintendency of the New Castle schools pays $120 per month.

GOOD PROSPECTS FOR OIL IN WARING WELL

Drilling has been completed on the oil well on the farm of E. L. and J. O. Waring in Bethlehem township and the well will be shot in the near future.

At the present time some difficulty is being experienced in obtaining the services of a man to shoot the well as most men who follow this line of work, one at the present time busy in other fields.

Good Prospects

According to E. L. Waring there is a good showing of oil as samples have been taken from the well in the course of the drilling. The drillers have high hopes for a good producer.

In Promising Field

The Waring farm, on which the well is being drilled, is located near the Bethlehem township house and in the same neighborhood of the Hamilton farm where a 24 barrel well was struck several months ago.

Russell Milligan, employed on The Age, while working about the press Monday night, had his right foot caught in the machinery and sustained a broken bone in the little toe and severe bruises to the member. Home remedies were applied by fellow employees.

PENNSY BRAKEMAN VICTIM OF MISHAP MONDAY.

W. E. Hannah, aged 30, a Pennsy brakeman residing in Newark sustained severe injuries when he fell from a freight train traveling at the rate of 25 mile an hour near Conesville Monday morning.

A deep gash was cut in the victim's head and his back was badly sprained.

To Newark Hospital The injured man was taken to Newark on his train and transferred to an ambulance which conveyed him to the city hospital.

Hannah was standing on the platform of a gondola when he slipped on some ice and fell to the ground. He alighted on the back of his head and was rendered unconscious. The train was stopped and the injured man picked up. His injuries are not considered dangerous.

VALUATIONS BOOSTED BY COMMISSION

PUBLIC UTILITIES OF OHIO PAYING MORE TAXES.

That the Tax Commission of Ohio has boosted the taxable valuations of the public utilities of the state, without fear or favor, since it got busy on the job two years ago, is proven by its annual report received by County Auditor Frank Mowery Monday. In fact, the total increase in the two years has been enormous, although the passage of the Smith one per cent tax law was responsible for much of the increase, it providing for actual valuations.

Thumb End Shot Off by Roscoe Lad

Clyde Freeze Victim of Mishap While Cleaning Gun That "Wasn't Loaded," Monday.

Clyde Freeze, 19-year-old son of Henry Freeze of Roscoe, while oiling up a shotgun, which "wasn't loaded" at his home Monday morning, blew the tip of his left thumb off when he placed it over the end of one of the barrels and accidentally pulled the trigger.

New Club Room for Masons

A new club room is being furnished at the Masonic temple in the J. J. Murray building on the corner of Hickory and Main street.

The pool room outfit which has been used at Doc Abbott's place was purchased by the lodge and a billiard table will be installed.

No Alimony Need be Paid by Veteran

Judge Ashman, in a decision handed down Monday, denied the petition of Harriett Allen in which she sought to compel her husband, Elias Allen to pay her alimony.

The evidence showed that Allen, who is 72 years of age, draws $18 per month as pension, being a veteran of the Civil war. This is his only means of support and he lives alone in a shanty on his farm near New Castle. The aged couple parted ten years ago, the husband allowing the wife and children to occupy the home. Since that time, he has been left alone by his family and the court decided that he needed all of his pension to provide for the necessities of life. At the same time, it was held that the wife, with the property she has the use of and several grown children, should not be in want.

Officers Named by Barbers

At the regular monthly meeting of the Barber's union held Monday evening officers for the ensuing year were elected.

Important business was transacted and plans for furthering the interests of the union were discussed.

At the present time every shop in the city is union, with the exception of one.

Officers were elected as follows: President, William Renner Vice President, Emmet Frye Secretary, Jesse Granstaff Treasurer, Dale Reed Recorder, Clarence Guntner Inner Guide, William Long Outer Guide, Bert Boyer.

Stolen Horse and Buggy Recovered

The horse and buggy, belonging to Timothy McFarland of the Fresno vicinity, which was stolen from the Third street hitching rack, Saturday night, was located by Chief of Police Mapel and Sheriff McDonald in the Bowman vicinity, Sunday morning.

Had Been Turned Loose When J. K. Richesson of near Bowman went to his barn at about 8 o'clock Sunday morning, he found a strange horse, hitched to a buggy, standing by the roadside. The animal had apparently wandered to the Richesson farm, after being turned loose by the thief and the buggy had become fastened between the mail box and fence.

Robe and Harness Gone Working upon a clue, the officers left the city on a hunt for the stolen property and soon learned of the horse found by Richesson. An investigation showed that it was the rig for which they were looking. The bridle, lines, holdback straps and breeching were gone, leaving only the middle-hand and tugs. A robe and horse blanket, which were in the buggy, were also missing.

An investigation is being conducted by the police and it is thought that an arrest will be made shortly.

Poor Place for Thumb

Dr. Middleton was called, dressed the injured member and picked a number of shot from the bone of the thumb. Young Freeze was polishing the exterior of the gun and in some manner cocked the trigger. Thinking it was not loaded he snapped it shut with his foot while he held to the end of the barrel his thumb resting on the edge.

Badly Frightened

The discharge badly frightened him and he fell to the ground as if badly wounded. His mother, who was near, came running to his side and then hurriedly summoned Dr. Middleton. Unless the bone becomes infected no serious results are anticipated.

Mr. Cresap Reads Paper to Wranglers

An instructive and carefully prepared paper was read last night before the Wranglers by E. W. Cresap on "Has Alexander Hamilton's Influence on Democracy been Adverse or Favorable?"

Mr. Cresap's paper was a strong defense of the nation's first great financier. He held that on the battlefield, in the constitutional convention, in the public life of the nation in its early years and in his great state papers Hamilton was easily the foremost man of his times.

Throughout his paper Mr. Cresap strongly contrasted Hamilton and Jefferson to the advantage of the former. He maintained that Hamilton was as true a patriot as Jefferson, far more able intellectually, more of a statesman and less of a demagogue and the greatest of all exponents of the constitution.

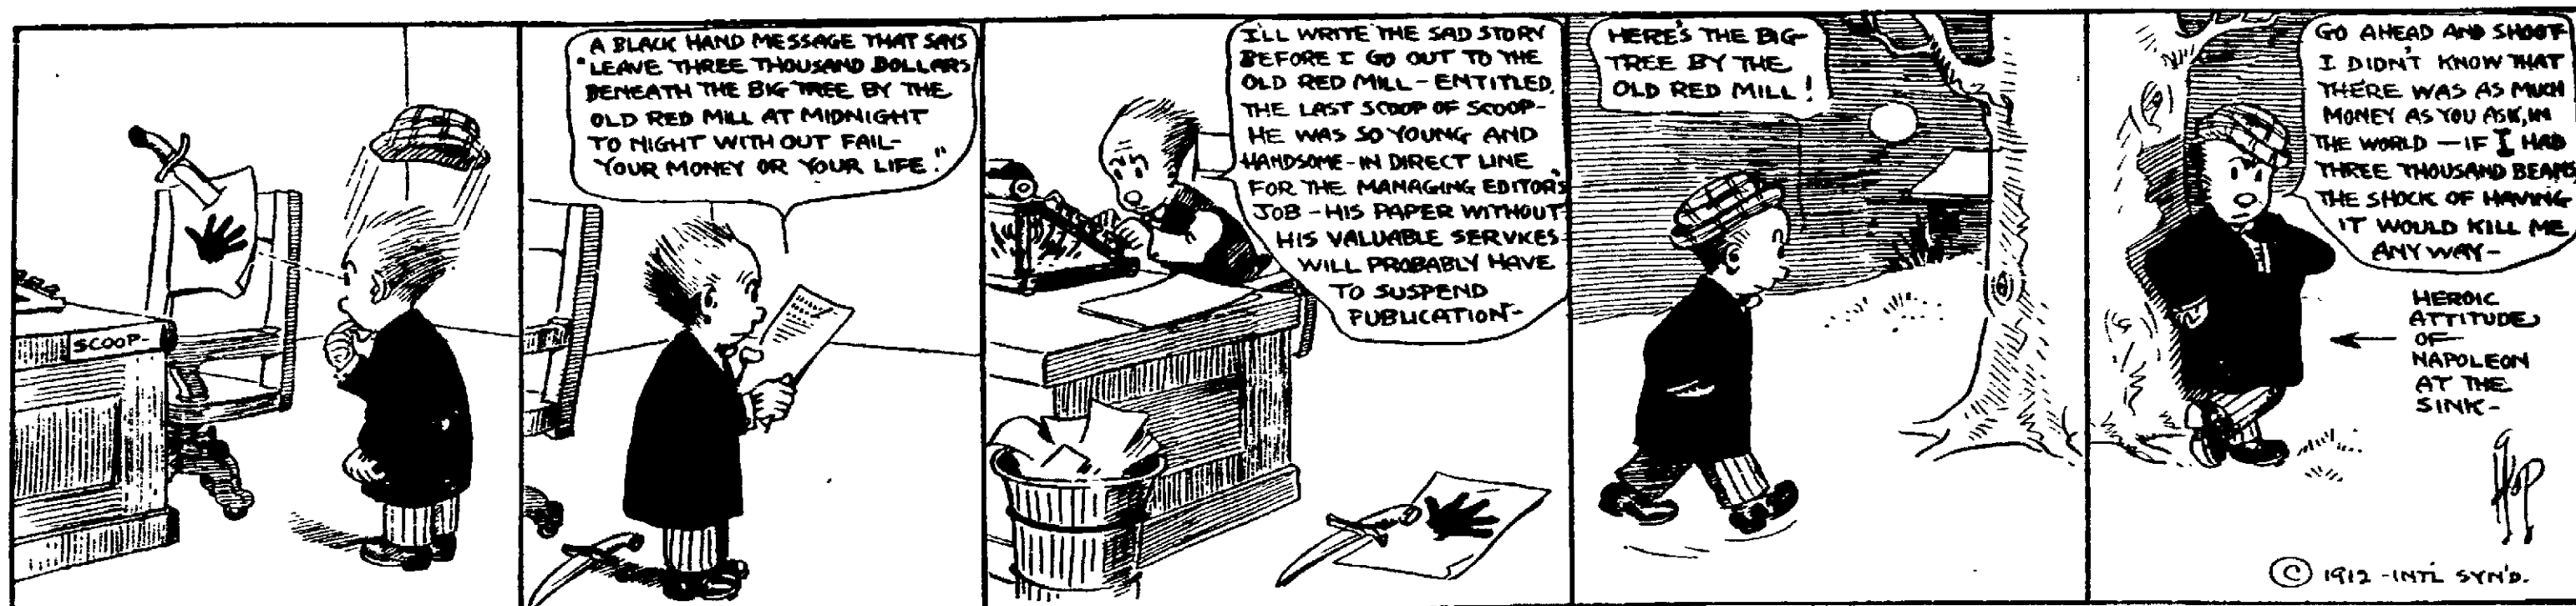

The discussion which followed was extremely interesting. The influence which these two men have exerted down to our own times was interestingly traced. The next paper will be read Monday evening, January 6 by C. E. Bryant on "The Re-organized School System of the Future."

Big Rat Hunt On At Orange

The rat-hunt in progress at Orange will be concluded Wednesday and the losing side will give an oyster supper honoring the winners on Wednesday night.

There are eighteen "bold hunters" on each side. C. E. Nelson and Jesse Richmond are the captains.

New Books at Public Libaray

The following list of books has been received and placed on the shelves of the Public Library.

The list contains some valuable books of reference, such as the "Moths of the Lumberlost" by Gene Stratton Porter; the book is beautifully illustrated, and written in Mrs. Porter's usual charming style.

The fiction list includes the "six best sellers" of the month, as well as an unusually good selection of the best of the late fiction.

The Juvenile books of the list are more attractive than usual (if that is possible) and contain a choice lot of Fairy tales.

All who are interested in Dickens, should see the book of Dickens Children, delightfully illustrated by Jessie Wilcox Smith.

Blames Flagman for Wreck.
Geneva, O., Dec. 30.—Coroner Harry J. Austin issued the report of his investigation of the wreck between a Lake Shore freight train and city streetcar at Center street crossing in Ashabula, on Dec. 16, which cost eight lives. His report charges the townsmen, Thomas Hoolihan, with neglect for failing to lower the crossing gates in time and holds the train crew guilty of exceeding the local railroad speed regulations.

ARREST SEVEN FOR WHOLESALE THEFTS

New York, Dec. 30.—An epidemic of bold robberies and safecrackings in Bronx borough, apparently the work of an organized band of criminals, who are estimated to have realized something like $100,000 in loot from their operations, has been ended, the police believe, by the arrest of five men and two women.

Johnny Kilbane Will Be A Busy Little Fighter This Winter.

CLEVELAND.—Johnny Kilbane, the featherweight champion, is nipping out a strenuous campaign that will keep him busy for some time to come. He intends to fight on all the boys who are clamoring for a bout. As a starter, he will meet Eddie Morgan, the English bantamweight, who has been doing some fine battling in this country within the past couple of months. While no date has been announced, it is likely that Los Angeles will get the bout in the near future.

On the surface it would appear that Kilbane will have much the better of the war, but as the English bantamweight is 118 and the American featherweight weighs 122 pounds it will be seen that there will be little, if any, difference in actual poundage. And Morgan is rather heavy for such a Brit's bantam. When he boxed Eddie O'Keefe in New York recently the latter weighed within a few ounces of his opponent.

By the way, Eddie Morgan is not a false alarm, like many foreigners who have visited America lately. In his first bout he decisively defeated Frankie Burns, the Jersey bantam, in New York a short time ago. Morgan's showing in the O'Keefe contest was impressive. But boxing Kilbane twenty rounds is a different proposition from waltzing through short bouts with boys of the Burns and O'Keefe variety, neither of whom has a punch.

Al Palzer Will Have His Hands Full Will Luther McCarty.

LOS ANGELES, CAL.—Al Palzer and Luther McCarty are hard at work preparing for their twenty round meeting to be held here New Year's day. Pugilistic experts here who have watched Palzer work are of the opinion that he will defeat McCarty and have made him favorite in the betting. On the other hand, the adherents of McCarty believe their choice will be returned the winner. For a year or more Palzer enjoyed the distinction of being hailed as the leader of the future greats, but since McCarty defeated Carl Morris, Al Kaufman and Jim Flynn the Iowa farmer has had to give place to McCarty, whose record eclipses that of any other white heavyweight in the ring at the present time. When this pair of stalwart battlers come together for twenty rounds the outcome is bound to be decisive. Both lack the polish of the class of men who were prominent ten years ago, but they compare favorably with the most rugged and determined of past ring warriors. The spectacle they will furnish should be productive of many thrills for those who favor genuine fighting rather than scientific boxing.

MAKING SPECIALTY OF SEED BUSINESS AND LAMB FEEDING

Woodland Farm, in Champaign County, Owned by Wing Brothers, is Excellent Example of What Can be Done With Rundown Land

(By F. J. Salter, College of Agriculture, Ohio State University.)

Woodland farm, owned by Joseph E. Wing and brothers, is located in Champaign county, Ohio. The farm contains 265 acres and is devoted to two specialties: seed grain and lamb feeding. The Wings started in the seed business about fifteen years ago, and they now do an annual business of about $124,000.

A seed corn sold is raised on the farm. This part of the business is rather disappointing, even though corn brings the highest price of any seed sold. The reason for this is that it requires considerable tied up capital and much labor to prepare the seed. The corn on the ear is standing, then the butt and tip kernels a cost of $300. The ditching was done with a Buckeye ditching machine. It did excellent work except in sandy soil. The ditches were filled by means of a railroad rail dragged diagonally across the trench and the pile of dirt.

Mr. Wing seeds his alfalfa 20 pounds per acre, with a bushel of barley as a nurse crop. The nurse crop is cut as soon as it is large enough to make a good crop of hay. It has been found that harrowing the alfalfa after the first and second cutting will destroy a great many weeds and will pull out the grass and not injure the alfalfa. Mr. Wing advocates early spring seeding, before the frosts are shelled off, and a germination test made of each ear. The alfalfa seed is bought, as this plant does not mature seed in Ohio. Recently melilotus is being grown. This is the common sweet clover, and the seed sells for the same price as alfalfa. Garden seeds are kept also, but merely for the accommodation of customers, as there is no profit in them.

The other principal product from the farm is lambs. As a rule about 1400 head are fed out each year. Most of these are bought on the Chicago market, shipped to the farm and fattened on corn, alfalfa and corn stover. They are fed and kept in a large feeding barn and several sheds containing feeding racks. They are usually ready for market by the first of May. Only a few sheep are raised on the farm and these are horses.

Much is added to the appearance of the Wing farm by the beautiful buildings. The dwelling house is built of concrete and stucco. The carriage barn is of concrete and cobblestones with frame galleries. It is unique in design and appearance. The other farm buildings, while not so fine in appearance, are commodious and well built.

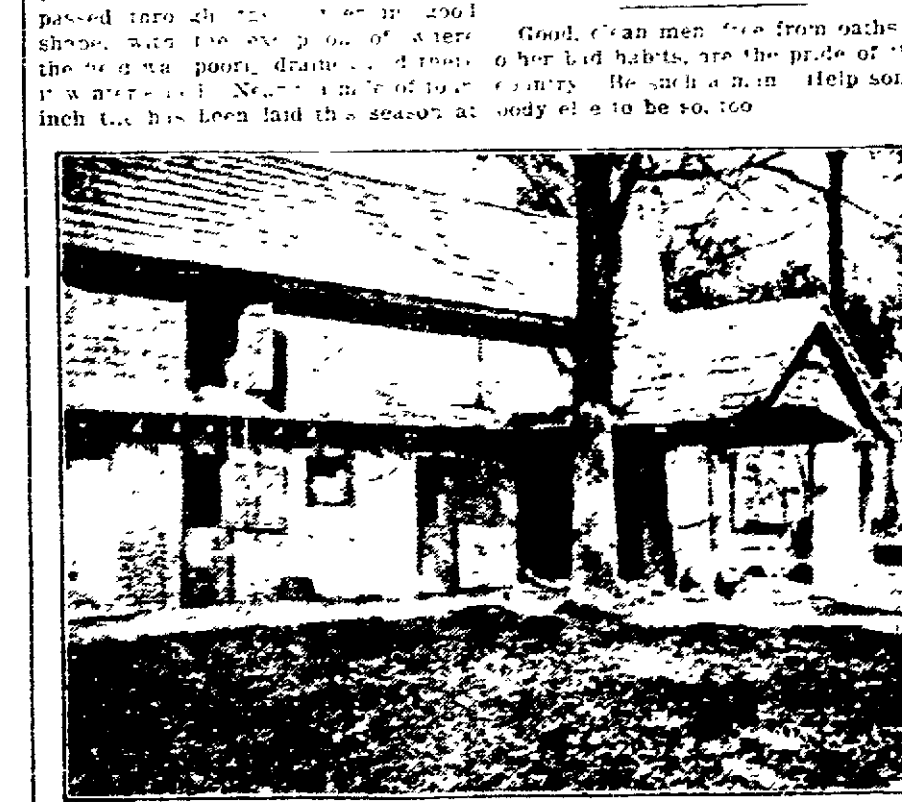

Monolithic silo on Woodland Farm.

The rotation usually practiced on Woodland farm is corn two years and alfalfa four years. This is frequently changed to suit the season and other conditions.

The only grain crops produced are corn and barley. About 75 acres are usually planted to corn. The variety grown is Wing's White Cap. Mr. Wing believes in hybridization, and has done much experimenting. He has developed a cross between a white and yellow variety which he believes will be quite valuable. No fertilizer is used on corn land, but a little is applied before seeding to alfalfa. A small amount of potash is added to the bottom seeds where it is needed.

This year Mr. Wing has 150 acres of alfalfa, half of it pure seedling. It is a fine alfalfa, was sown last year, and it passed into the hands of a very good sheep raiser. The alfalfa is a very good variety, and the sheep are the pride of the country. It is a very fine variety, and the sheep are the pride of the country. NEW YORK'S NEW YEAR

Scenes of disgusting revelry will mark scores and hundreds of the cafes and restaurants of Greater New York tonight. Bacchanalian revellies equal to the worst which marked the declining years of the Roman empire will be the rule in the leading resorts of the metropolis.

Human beings bearing the name and form of "woman" will give public exhibitions which will mark them in spirit, if not in name, prostitutes of the most common type.

Men, rich in apparel, but poverty stricken in manhood, with whom wealth is a substitute for character and whose highest ambition is the gratification of appetite, will deluge the city with maddening liquor.

Coarse jokes will pass for wit and shallow badinage for the outgivings of the intellect. Ribald songs will burden the midnight air and gluttony that would disgust the swine of the barnyard will be the order of the night.

This has been the course pursued in New York on New Year's eve for years. How the revolting custom became established we do not know. Why it is perpetuated we do not know.

But it has been the accepted order in years past and we presume it will prevail tonight. Barbaric feasting and drinking; sensuous orgies that pall description; and an abandonment to disgusting immoralities and excesses of all kinds, are the methods by which the richest city in the world observes the advent of a new year.

We see no reason why a New Year's celebration should be observed in a solemn way. But it is a dignified event and should at least be observed decorously. There can be no reason why it should be the occasion for a riot of eating and drinking and sensuality such as the modern world sees nowhere outside of New York.

It is said that so gross and revolting has the annual spectacle become that a committee of thirteen eminent New Yorkers, headed by Jacob A. Riis, have instituted a movement which they hope will end the blot which this new year's orgy has fixed on the name of New York.

Whether they succeed or not, their effort is a worthy one. No people as a whole, nor any considerable part of them, can give themselves over to such orgies as has become the established order in New York and hope for their civilization to endure.

Nineveh and Tyre tried it and went down. Babylonia and Persia tried it and perished. Rome tried it and all the mighty strength of the marvelous civil fabric she reared could not stand the strain of a people's sapped morals.

And when the day comes that the barbaric revelries of New York's year-end celebration is typical of the rest of the country, the world will be afforded another illustration of the fact that neither education nor civil nor political freedom nor boundless wealth can save a nation whose moral life is rotten at the core.

THE STEEL TRADE

Those who have been looking for a panic, or at least for hard times, as a result of the election of Woodrow Wilson, will be surprised and no doubt gratified at the action of the United States Steel Corporation in increasing wages.

The gentlemen of Wall street seem to have been pleasantly shocked. They had figured that in case of a certain reduction of the duties of the steel schedule, and of the suit against the steel trust, there would be no increase of wages. But conditions in the trade are so extraordinary satisfactory, and they seem to be steadily improving—as to make it impossible both natural and proper. There are enough orders now on the books of the mills to keep things going from six to nine months, even were there no new business. The last quarter of 1912 was the best of the year.

New contracts are being made fully equal to the monthly average of last year—which is high. It is thought that rail purchases for the current year will be the best in the history of the steel industry. Next to that will witness the placing of many large contracts. Business has seemed a million in a rise during the last ten days.

So far from there having been a panic, there has been a decided advance. There is no reason why there should be any concern over conditions in the steel trade at least for another year. It may be added that the general business situation continues to be good. The people evidently have confidence in the Democratic party under its present leadership.

We believe that it is also true that we are so far outgrown the high protective system that now it is more disturbed than they used to be over prospective changes in rates of duty. There is, too, less disposition to take pains for political effect. Men are inclined to manifest more interest in economic and unfavorable symptoms when they develop, so that the world that prosperity shall continue.

Doubtless there are a few ardent Republicans who will rub their eyes when they read of even one increase of wages following a Democratic victory. They have been taught to believe that after such a victory things were bound to move in the other direction. But even they will rejoice at this evidence of sound business conditions.—Indianapolis News

WEALTHY WOMEN TO AID STRIKERS

Urge Waist Makers to Join Garment Workers.

New York, Dec. 30.—A general strike of the Garment Workers' and Tailors' unions of New York city is on, following the decision reached after several meetings of the various committees and a mass meeting of the workers. There was no walkout, the workers merely failing to go to the shops. The number of persons idle is estimated variously at from 80, to 125,000.

More than 1,500 pickets assembled at Clinton hall to receive instructions from the national and local executive committees of the United Garment Workers.

The strike so far is confined to the makers of outer garments for men and boys, but, under the patronage of Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont and Mrs. Rose Pastor Stokes and other wealthy and prominent women, plans are under way to have the Ladies' Waist and Dressmakers' union join in the strike. If this is accomplished the strike will affect more than 200,000 persons and will be the greatest clothing strike in the history of the country.

The demands of the striking garment workers include: An increase of from 15 to 20 per cent in wages; an eight-hour day; full pay for overtime; sanitary shops; no sweat shop or tenement house work and abolition of the subcontractor system.

TARIFF WAR WITH RUSSIA IS AVERTED

Washington, Dec. 30.—Only two days more of life remain to the treaty of 1892, which expires on Jan. 1, 1913. In accordance with the notice of abrogation served on the government of Russia by President Taft a year ago, following the agitation in congress over the Jewish passport issue.

No one in authority here would admit that a formal agreement has been reached with Russia in regard to tariff matters pending the negotiation of a new treaty. It is believed, however, that some understanding definite enough to prevent a tariff war has been reached.

Michigan Congressman H. L. Panama, Dec. 30.—William W. The congressman was at first taken to the Ancon hospital, but was afterwards removed to the Taboga sanitarium, where no body is allowed to see him. The congressman is in such poor health that the doctors have prescribed absolute rest.

May Cut Out "Tosca"

Chicago, Dec. 30.—Following vigorous protests by Miss Carolina White, Eleanor De Cisneros and Maggie Toye that they are being overworked, Director Andres Dippel of the Chicago Grand Opera company got an ultimatum from Mary Garden. Miss Garden says she will not sing "Tosca" on Jan. 3 unless Vanni Marcoux sings with her. Marcoux sang "Sarpis" with her in this opera in Boston and the next day Mayor Fitzgerald threatened to revoke the theater license if Marcoux didn't abate the license of his wailing scene. Dippel is not inclined to yield and "Tosca" may not be sung here.

DELAYS MAKE ALLIES WEARY

Turk's Dilatory Tactics Resented by Envoys.

London, Dec. 30.—With the deadlock firmer than at any previous time, and with the possibility of a resumption of hostilities looming up with menacing distinctiveness, the negotiations into the Turko-Balkan peace conference was reached today in St. James palace.

Rachid Pasha, speaking for the Turkish envoys, told the representatives of the allies that he had communicated with Constantinople, but received no instructions which would allow him and his colleagues to withdraw from the stand they had taken.

This reply rallied the plenipotentiaries of the allies, who pointed out that the Turks were clothed with all the power necessary without waiting time by calling upon the porte for fresh instructions every time an obstacle arose.

The Turks insisted that they were justified in demanding the retention of Adriaopole, because "it was being bravely defended" when hostilities came to a close.

Reports from Vienna stated that Russia had again begun troop movements to the southwestern frontier and that Roumania had resumed mobilization of her army.

GAYNOR TAKES HAND IN POLICE INQUIRY

New York, Dec. 30.—Decision as to the course to be followed by the several allied civic organizations with regard to Police Commissioner Waldo is being deferred. It was said to await definite information concerning Mayor Gaynor's position. It is the belief of some of those connected with this citizen's movement that Commissioner Waldo will not be at the head of the police department for more than two months longer. If he should resign or should be removed within that time, the leaders of the movement against him feel that any effort to oust him in the interval would be a waste of time and energy.

This belief that Commissioner Waldo's tenure of office is limited has given rise to rumors that Mayor Gaynor has entered the police situation in person and is conducting an investigation of his own into the affairs of the department entirely independent of any other inquiry. No verification of this rumor was forthcoming.

MADERO SENDS TO EUROPE FOR COIN

Mexico City, Dec. 30.—Politicians and financiers close to the administration admit that the government is hovering on the brink of bankruptcy, and that it is straining every nerve to raise $10,000,000 with no place in sight in which to borrow the money.

The hurried visit of Minister Pedro Caceron to New York recently was to implore Wall street and seek a loan. He failed. Facing a desperate situation, President Madero is going to send Gustavo Madero, his brother, and power behind the Mexican throne, as special financial agent abroad.

Gustavo has been commissioned to visit Japan first and try for money there. Failing there, Gustavo is to continue to France and England, as the Mexican government has abandoned all hope of getting another loan in the United States.

Auto Racer Is Killed.

Los Angeles, Dec. 30.—Hal Shain, a well-known automobile racer, received injuries that caused death in half an hour, three others were seriously hurt and a number slightly cut and bruised when Shain's machine shot out of the cup-shaped track on the Concession pier at Venice and plunged into the crowd. The most seriously injured is Mrs. A. B. Atkinson of Vancouver, B. C., who has a fractured lower jaw and lacerated hip.

GERMANY'S FOREIGN SECRETARY IS DEAD

Stuttgart, Germany, Dec. 30.—Baron Alfred Von Kiderlen Waechter, secretary of foreign affairs for Germany, generally referred to as "the new Bismarck of the German empire," died suddenly of heart failure, in his sixtieth year.

Herr Kiderlen Waechter, who was a Bavarian by birth, represented a new school of diplomacy in Germany and was the moving spirit in politics which was played with France and Spain over Morocco.

Herr Von Kiderlen Waechter was the second of Germany's first rank statesmen to be removed by death in the past few months, the other being Herr Von Gieberstein, ambassador to England.

PREPARES LIST OF OHIO BOYS OF 1776

Columbus, O., Dec. 30.—Colonel W. L. Curry, as secretary of the Sons of American Revolution, has just completed a work that has required almost 12 years' service, and which is said to be the only work of its kind in existence. The task of preparing a list of all soldiers in the great American Revolution that enlisted from Ohio, and of those buried in Ohio with the place of their burial, was assigned to Colonel Curry in 1900 by the society, and after the examination of all records and endless correspondence, this work has just been completed, and is ready for the printer.

The list contains the burial places of 807 officers and privates of the great war in 1776, distributed over 64 of the 88 counties of the state. It also contains the name and address of every soldier of that great war that was a resident of Ohio in 1819. This list contains 974 names.

Two Held For Murder.

Cleveland, O., Dec. 30.—Nick Eshlin, 19, confessed, police say, that he inflicted the stab wounds which caused the death of Rasbali Pappas, a restaurant proprietor. The quarrel which led to the stabbing started when Pappas was tried to purchase Eshlin's interest in the restaurant which they owned. Eshlin's brother Theodore is also being held by the police.

They remained at the hospital about two hours. Afterwards they went to the old home of Mr. Shepard at Clinton for a brief visit, returning to this city.

Crazed Over Evangelist.

Columbus, O., Dec. 30.—Fred Whalen, 28, was declared insane in probate court and was committed to the State hospital following an examination by alienists. Whalen believed that the Lord had told him of the presence of Billy Sunday in this city and that he was in continual spiritual communication with the evangelist.

On motion of the government, Edward Clark, Cincinnati, confessed dynamiter, who testified for the government, was given suspended sentence. All motions for new trials for the 38 labor union officials convicted in the dynamite conspiracy cases were overruled by Federal Judge Anderson.

Motions for arrest of judgment in behalf of all the men also were overruled. As soon as court convened District Attorney Miller rose from his seat and said: "If the court please, the government asks for judgments on the verdicts."

Chester H. Krum, counsel for the prisoners, then addressed the court as follows: "We ask in behalf of all the 38 men found guilty that the verdicts be set aside."

"That motion will be overruled," said Judge Anderson.

The motions for arrest of judgments were likewise disposed of.

HARMON COMPLETES FAREWELL MESSAGE

Columbus, O., Dec. 30.—Notwithstanding the fact that in another week he is to retire to private life, Governor Harmon will give the legislature some extensive advice as to legislation—the fruit of his four years' experience in the executive office. His message is completed and will go to the printers this week.

He will make the heart of administration a chief feature of the message. This new feature of the state government he strongly urged before it was created, and its work has provided facts that he can now use in support of what he claimed for it.

Though the governor has refused to indicate what will be carried in his message it is understood that he will have some recommendations as to legislation under the new constitutional amendments to make.

"Where Quality Counts"

CONTEST

For the Beautiful Library and Book Cases. Is Growing in Fervor and Popularity—Another Large Number of Votes Put in the Box.

The big Library Voting Contest, which opened recently and news of which has been given in The Morning Tribune, has exceeded all expectations on the start. Interest was at fever heat even the first day and Mr. Smith of Smith's Drug Store where the Ballot Box is located, said that it was wonderful the way people took up with this grand offer on the very first day. A glance at the standing of contestants will convince you that he is correct.

One of our city's most brilliant literary men has examined the books in this library and said that no hand could have selected better books than are contained in this library and the sincerity of the many compliments Mr. Ransom of the Ransom Dry Goods Store, where the books are on exhibition has received, is evidenced by the large poll of votes.

Several of the merchants, who are interested in this splendid offer, say they know of many people who are holding back many thousand votes. Some are undecided what organization they will work for and others are preparing for a dark horse, so it behooves all who are interested, to clip the coupon from this paper and insist on receiving votes from the merchants who are giving them. Bear them in mind. You will find their names in the advertising columns of this paper from time to time.

Judges Messrs. Thompson, Meade and Cantwell counted the votes this week and kindly ask that the people will mark ballots plainly and also bunch them where it is possible.

HOGS OF THE BACON TYPE ARE GROWING IN POPULARITY

Farmers Should Raise and Feed the Kind of Animals That the Market Demands—Two Recognized Types of Swine Raised in America

(By C. S. Plumb, College of Agriculture, Ohio State University.)

The large Yorkshire is a popular breed of bacon hogs.

To be a successful breeder or feeder of hogs, one must recognize certain important things. One must feed for market demands. There are two recognized types of hogs—those for lard production, and those for bacon. The so-called lard hog is short, thick and broad of back; has strong, full hams, a deep body, and short legs. When well fattened, this type of hog is covered with a thick layer of fat. After the carcass is cooled, the butcher trims off this back fat and makes lard of it.

The bacon type of hog has a narrow body and back, and should have a long, smooth side. It does not have a heavy ham or shoulder. The body is not as deep as that of the lard hog; the legs are usually longer. From the sides of the bacon hog comes the breakfast bacon, containing considerable lean, which is so much in demand. The lard hog is common to America and the bacon type to Europe.

The farmer needs a type that the market demands and that will yield him the most profit. This must involve profitable feeding and fattening. From a breeding point of view, the farmer must also be able to keep a class of sows that farrow and raise good-sized litters. At maturity the bacon hog has great length and size and farrows large litters. The lard hog fattens and finishes off more quickly than the bacon hog, but does not reproduce so well.

With a rapidly growing demand for bacon, this type of hog will no doubt increase in popularity in America. So far as price is concerned, unless one can sell in large quantities, say carload lots, he will have no advantage in selling the bacon type rather than the other. If raised in considerable numbers, the packer in the large city will perhaps pay a premium for well-finished car lots or more. The feature of producing large litters is one of the commendable characteristics of the bacon type.

The important breeds of hogs of the fat type are: Duroc Jersey, Poland China, Chester White and Berkshire. The breeds of hogs of the bacon type are: Large Yorkshire, Tamworth and Hampshire, or Thin Rind. Both the Berkshire and Hampshire, under certain conditions of breeding and feeding, occupy a position about half way between the lard and bacon types.

Smoothness of body and good quality are important features of the modern porker. When the body is free from wrinkles or creases, it is much more easily dressed after killing than when it is rough and seamy. A large per cent of the hogs slaughtered to-day are killed in packing houses. Here, the animals are scalded after slaughter and the carcasses are run up and down in a mechanical scraper, which removes most of the hair and greatly reduces hand labor. The more creases along the sides and about the head, the more difficult it becomes to remove the hair by artificial process.

The smooth-bodied pig of much quality kills out in the most satisfactory manner, if properly fattened. Such animals, no matter what the breed or type, if of acceptable weight, command a premium. A standard weight for a market hog is about 225 pounds.

SOME DON'TS FOR WOOD-LOT OWNERS

Nearly every farm in Ohio has its woodlot. From this woodlot, which is all that remains of the virgin forest, the farmer obtains fuel, fence-posts, poles, and even timber for use in building sheds and barns.

As a general rule, but little care is given the woodlot. It is allowed to fall into a bad condition, where, in fact, it forms one of the most valuable parts of the farm. Following are some "don'ts" for woodlot owners.

Don't destroy or disfigure your woodlot. Every farmer needs it for his own use. The price of lumber is continually going up, and the farmer who has a woodlot to draw upon for his timber for home use will find that it means money in his pocket.

Don't sell trees to the lumberman. He will only cut the best and leave the poorer trees standing. In cutting timber, especially for firewood, cut the poorest growth first.

Don't pasture your woodlot. Cattle and sheep trample down and also eat the young growth, thus preventing reproduction. They also pack the soil so that it is hard and will not hold moisture.

Don't turn the woodlot so heavily that the sunlight will stream into the open places and give grass and weeds a chance to obtain a foothold. Too much light allows the trees to branch low and thus makes poor timber.

Don't take out the best trees in the woodlot when making a cutting. Take

How the Daisy Was Named.

Of all the flowers of the field the daisy is the most appropriately named. Probably not one person in a hundred understands the significance of this little flower. Hundreds and hundreds of years ago it got its name, and in all parts of the world the name means the same thing. The nature lover who named the daisy had in his study of the wild flower observed that it opened its eye with the opening of the day and closed it with the setting of the sun. So with the simplicity of the true artist he called it the eye of the day, the dayeye or, as we spell it today, the daisy.

HELPLESS IN PATH OF ONRUSHING TRAIN

Father Imperiled by Action of His Own Son.

While Peter Blitzer, sixty years old, was pinned to a railroad track by a huge piece of ice his son, a night operator at Parkside, Pa., gave an express the open track, being ignorant of his father's danger, but as the train bore down upon his helpless parent the latter managed to relight his lantern and flag the train, says the New York Times.

The father is a watchman employed by the Philadelphia and Reading railway. In the Parkside tunnel he had been in the habit of cutting the ice from the walls when no train was due to pass over the tracks. He entered the tunnel just after midnight and worked at the ice until after 2 o'clock.

THE ICE CRUSHED HIM TO THE TRACKS.

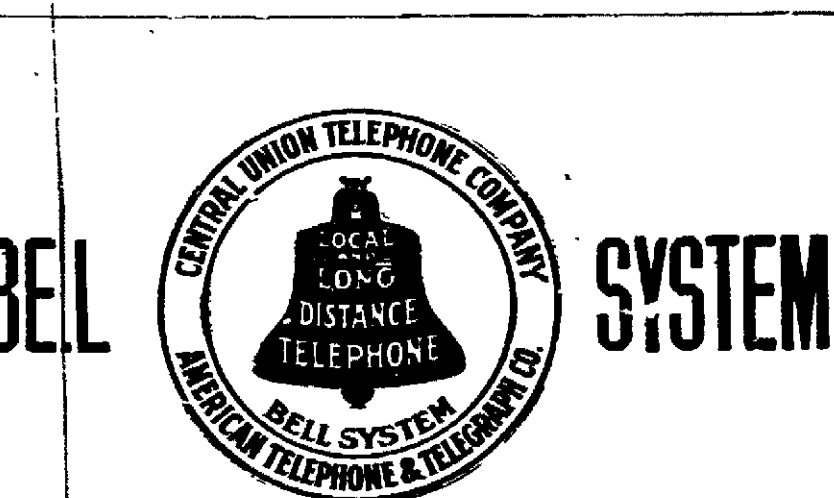

He had reached the entrance of the tunnel to return to his watch house when a cake of ice weighing several hundred pounds fell from the ceiling, crushing him to the tracks.

A lantern which he carried was dashed to the ground and the flame extinguished. Alone in the darkness he fought desperately to free himself, but could not move. As the time for the 3.20 train drew near, to which his son had given a clear way, the man renewed his struggles, moving his body slightly until he was able to grasp the lantern. Then started another fight to get a match from his pocket. Finally he was successful, lighting the red lantern and placing it on the track as a warning just in time to flag the train. He was lifted from the tracks by the train crew and carried to his home in Parkside. He suffered from serious internal injuries.

Photographed Six Hundred Feet Up.

Sam Kilham, a steeplejack engaged to paint the flag-staff of the wireless tower at Arlington, Va., was photographed by a friend as he clung to the top of the staff. Kilham got $125 for the work. He said that compared with a like job on the flag-staff of the Woolworth building in New York it was really a risk. For if a steeplejack fell from the top of the Woolworth building he would be hurt on a roof below and have some life left in him, but on the Arlington tower he would hit a steel beam, then be cut off again like a rubber ball, only to hit another and so on until he struck the ground 600 feet below. When Kilham was photographed he was 350 feet higher than the summit of the Washington monument. —New York Times.

CHAPTER II—James Hambleton, who came near but never actually into the family, was generally understood to have been made in shoes, though in reality it was drugs.

"People say 'shoes' the minute they hear the word Lynn, and I'm tired of explaining," Mrs. Van Camp put it. She was third in line from the successful druggist, and could afford, if anybody could, to be supercilious toward trade. But she wasn't, even after twenty years of somewhat restless submission to the Hambleton yoke. And it was she who, during her last visit to the family stronghold, helped up before the young James the advantages of a commercial career.

"You're a nice boy, Jimsy, and I can't see you turned into a poor lawyer. You're not hard-headed enough to be a good one. As for being a minister, well—no. Go into business, dear boy, something substantial, and you'll live to thank your stars."

Jimsy received this advice at the time with small enthusiasm, and a reservation of criticism that was a credit to his manners, at least. But the time came when he leaned on it.

Her own child, however, Mrs. Van Camp encouraged to a profession from the first. "Alec isn't smart enough for business, but he may do something as a student," was Mrs. Van Camp's somewhat trying explanation; and Alec did do something as a student. Extremely impatient with any exhibition of laziness, the mother demanded a good accounting of her son's time. Alec and Jim, who were born in the same year, ran more or less side by side until the end of college.

They struggled together in sports and in arguments, "rushed" the same girl in turn or simultaneously, and spent their long vacations cruising up and down the Maine coast in a thirty-foot sailboat. Once they made a more ambitious journey all the way to Yarmouth and the Bay of Fundy in a good-sized fishing-smack.

But when college was done, their ways separated. Mrs. Van Camp, in the prime of her unusual faculties, having decorated the Hambleton "scutcheon like a gay cockade stuck airily up into the breeze. She had no part nor lot in the family pride, but understood it, perhaps, better than the Hambletons themselves. Her crime was that she played with it.

Alec, a full-fledged biologist, went to the Little Hebrides to work out his fresh and salad theory concerning the nerve system of the clam.

James, third son of John and Edith Hambleton of Lynn, had his eyes thoroughly opened in the three months after Commencement by a consideration of the family situation. It seemed to him that from babyhood he had been burning conscious of the pinching and skimping necessary to maintain the family pride. The two older brothers were exempt from the scorching process, the eldest being the family darling and the second a genius. Neither one could rationally be expected, "just at present," to take up the family accounts and make the income square up with even a decently generous outgo. And there were the girls yet to be educated.

Jim had no special talent to bless himself with, either in art or science. He was inordinately fond of the sea, but that did not help him in choosing a career. He had good taste in books and some little skill in music. He was, indeed, thrall to the human voice, especially to the low voice in woman, and he was that best of all critics, a good listener. His greatest riches, as well as his greatest charm, lay in a spirit of invincible youth; but he was no genius, no one perceived that more clearly than himself.

So he remembered Clara Van Camp's advice, wrote the whole story to Alec, and cast about for the one successful business chance in the four thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine bad ones—as the statistics have it.

He actually found it in shoes. Football muscle and grit went into the job of putting superior shoe on inferior foot, if necessary—at least on some foot. He got a chance to try his power in the home branch of a manufacturing house, and made good.

When he came to fill a position where there was opportunity to try new ideas, he tried them. He inspected tanneries and stockyards. He got composite measurements of all the feet in all the women's colleges in the year ninety-seven, he drilled salesmen and opened a night school for the buttonhole-makers, he made scientific study of heels, and he invented an aristocratic arch and put it on the market.

The family joked about his doings as the harmless experiments of a lively boy, but presently they began to enjoy his income. Through it all they were affectionate and kind, and the matter-of-course fondness which a family gives to the members that takes the part of useful drudge. John, the pet of the parents, married, and had his own eyes opened, it is to be supposed. Donald, the genius, had just arrived, after a dozen years or so, at the stage where he was mentioned now and then in the literary journals. But Jim stuck to shoes and kept the family on a fair tide of modest prosperity.

CHAPTER II.

Hambleton of Lynn. The Hambletons of Lynn had not distinguished themselves, in late generations at least, by remarkable deeds, though their department was such as to imply that they could if they would. They frankly regarded themselves as the elect of earth, if not of Heaven, always, however, with a becoming modesty. Since 1636 the family had pieced out its existence in the New World, tenaciously clinging to many of its old-country habits. It had kept the "b" in the family name, for instance; it had kept the name itself out of trade, and it had indulged its love of country life at the expense of more than one Hambleton fortune.

A daughter-in-law was once reported as saying that it would have been a good thing if some Hambleton had embarked in trade, since in that case they might have been saved from devoting themselves exclusively to an illustration of polite poverty. She was never forgiven, and died without being reconciled to the family. As to the spelling of the name, the family claimed ancestral authority as far back as King Fergus the First. Mrs. Van Camp, a relative by marriage—a woman considered by the best Hambletons as far too frank and worldly-minded—informed the family that King Fergus was as much a myth as Dido, and innocently brought forth printed facts to corroborate her statement. One of the ladies Hambleton crushed Mrs. Van Camp by stating, in a tone of deep personal conviction, with her cap awry, "So much the worse for Dido!"

A salient strength persisted in the Hambletons—a strength which retained its character in spite of cross-currents. The Hambleton tone and the Hambleton ideas retained their family color, and became, whether worthily or not, a part of the Hambleton pride. More than one son had lost his health or entire fortune, which was apt not to be large, in attempts to carry on a country place.

"A Hambleton trait!" they chuckled, with as much satisfaction as they considered it good form to exhibit. In Lynn, where family pride did not bring in large returns, this phrase became almost synonymous with genteel foolishness.

Once, in the years of Jim's apprenticeship to life, there came over him a fit of soul-sickness that nearly proved his ruin.

"I can't stand this," he wrote to Alec Van Camp; "it's too hard and dry and sordid for any man that's got a soul. It isn't the grind I mind, though that is hard enough; it is the 'Commercial Idea' that eats into a man's innards. He forgets there are things that money can't buy, and in his heart he grows contemptuous of anything to be had 'without money and without price.' He can't help it. If he is thinking of trade nine-tenths of the time, his mind gets set that way. I'm ready any minute to jump the fence, like father's old colt up on the farm. I'm not a snob, but I recognize now that there was some reason for all our old Hambleton ancestors being so finicky about trade."

"Do you remember how we used to talk, when we were kiddies, about keeping our ideals? Well, I believe I'm bankrupt, Alec. In my account with ideals, I don't want to howl, and these remarks don't go with anybody else, but I can say to you, I want them back again."

Alec did as a kiddie should do, writing much advice on long sheets of paper, and illustrating his points richly, like a good Scotchman, with scientific instances. A month or two later he contrived to have work to do in Boston, so that he could go out to Lynn and look up Jimsy's case. He even devised a cure by creating, in his mind, an office in the biological world which was to be offered to James on the ground that science needed just his abilities and training.

But when Alec arrived in Lynn he found that Jim, in some fashion or other, had found a cure for himself. He was deeper than ever in the business, and yet, in some spiritual sense, he had found himself. He had captured his ideal again and yoked it to duty—which is a great feat.

After twelve years of ferocious labor, with no vacations to speak of, James' mind took a turn for the worse. Physically he was as sound as a bell, though of lath-like thinness; but an efferescence in his blood lured him mind away from the study of lures and accounts and Parisian models and sent it careering, like Satan, up and down the earth. Romance, which had been dragged during the transition from youth to manhood, awoke and coaxed for its rights, and whispered temptingly in an ear not yet dulled to its voice. Freedom, open spaces, laughter, the fresh sweep of the wind, the high buccaneering piracy of life and joy—these things beglamoured his senses.

So one day he locked his desk with a final click. The business was in good shape. It is but justice to say that if it had not been, Romance had dangled her luring wisp of light in vain. Several of his new schemes had worked out well, his subordinates were of one mind with him, trade was flourishing. He felt he could afford a little spin.

Jimsy's radiating fancies focussed themselves, at last, on the vision of a trig little sailboat, "a jug of wine, a loaf of bread" in the cabin, with possibly a book of verses underneath the bow, or more suitably, in the shadow of the sail; and Alec Van Camp and himself astrid in the rigging or plunging together from the gunwale for an early swim. "And before I get off, I'll hear a singer that can sing," he declared.

He telegraphed Alec, who was by this time running down the eyewall of the squid, to meet him at his club in New York. Then he made short work with the family. Experience had taught him that an attack from ambush was most successful.

"Look here, Edith"—this was at the breakfast-table the very morning of his departure. Edith was sixteen, the tallest girl in the academy, almost ready for college and reckoned quite a queen in her world—"You be good and do my chores for me while I'm away, and I'll bring you home a duke. Take care of mother's bronchitis, and keep the house straight. I'm going on a cruise."

"All right, Jim"—Edith could always be counted on to catch the ball—"go ahead and have a bully time and don't drown yourself. I'll drive the team straight to water, mother and dad and the whole outfit, trust me!"

Considering the occasion and the correctness of the sentiments, Jim forbore, for once, from making the daily suggestion that she chasten her language. By the time the family appeared, Jim had laid out a rigid course of action for Miss Edith, who rose to the occasion like a soldier.

"Mother! I miss you, of course, but Jack and Harold"—two of Edith's admirers—"Jack and Harold can come around every day—stout arm to lean upon, that sort of thing. You know mother can't be a bit jolly without plenty of men about, and since Sue became engaged she really doesn't count. The boys will think they're running things, of course, but they'll see my iron hand in the velvet glove—you can throw a blue chip on that, Jimsy. And don't kiss me, Jim, for Dorothy Snell and I vowed, when we wished each other springs on—Oh, well, brothers don't count."

And so, amid the farewells of a tender, protesting family, he got off, leaving Edith in the midst of one of her monologues.

There was a telegram in New York saying that Alec Van Camp would join him in three days, at the latest. Hambleton disliked the club and left it, although his first intention had been to put up there. He picked out a modest, up-town hotel, new to him, for no other reason than that it had a pretty name. The Larue. Then he began to consider details.

BLANK PETITIONS NOT YET RECEIVED

Not a little speculation is being occasioned just now as to who will form the commission to draw up this city's new charter.

As yet the election board has been unable to get blanks and for this reason there have been no petitions circulated for those who desire to have their names on the ballot February 4.

It will be necessary to secure signatures of 2 per cent of the voting population in order to become a candidate for the commission.

The ballots to be cast at the election will contain the names of each candidate, fifteen of whom are to be elected, in addition to the clause which will read as follows: "Shall a commission be chosen to frame a charter."

Blanks for the voting for or against the proposition are left on the ballot.

In case the proposition to adopt the commission form of government fails to carry there will be nothing for the committee of 15 elected to do as the present city charter will continue in force.

File 25 Days Before

It will be necessary that the petitions be circulated and filed in same manner as is provided by law, that is they shall be filed not less than 25 days prior to the date of election.

Clerk Kollo Banks, of the election board stated that a number had applied for petitions and that the indications were that a large number of names will appear on the ballot.

DECLARES JAPANESE SOUGHT TO END WAR

Washington, Dec. 30.—New light of a surprising kind will be thrown on the negotiations preceding the close of the Russian-Japanese war, in a series of papers now in preparation by former President Theodore Roosevelt.

As Colonel Roosevelt will tell the story, it was the victorious Japanese who took the first step to end the war. The offer of the government to assist in terminating hostilities came not on the suggestion of Russia but at the direct request of Japan.

Colonel Roosevelt says he has at his disposal documentary proof of his part in the peace negotiations. Most striking of the papers that he will bring forward is a personal letter from the late Mikado to President Roosevelt, asking him to open a way for peace negotiations.
